How to fix?Q: initializing constructor reference variables I'm working on a C++ project for my semester project using VS2010 with C++Builder. I have a class with a reference variable that's basically a pointer to another object on the heap. I have a default constructor. I want to initialize that reference variable in the ctor, so I did something like this: reference var; In my ctor: reference_ = new SomeClass(); In my default ctor: reference_ = *pointerToSomeClass; It doesn't work. I tried this in my assignment method, and it works fine. What's the issue? edit: I'm trying to initialize the reference using a pointer to an object in the heap. A: Your problem is that you are trying to initialize a reference to a pointer with a pointer to another object. You can do this instead: reference_ = new SomeClass(); The reason why your first version of the constructor didn't work was that it was trying to assign a pointer-to-pointer to a pointer. However, pointers are first-class objects (though you cannot create a pointer directly), and pointers can be assigned to or from other pointers and references just fine. indefinitely The Republican National Convention in Miami was put on indefinite hold Monday because of the high water advisories, according to documents obtained by The Miami Herald. The documents, signed by Florida Gov. Rick Scott, tell convention organizers to suspend all events from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. Monday through Tuesday. Events that would ordinarily have been scheduled during those times, such as the convention's welcome reception, the welcome concert and the convention's official opening, will instead be conducted Monday through Thursday. Earlier Monday, Scott told reporters at a news conference that the convention, scheduled for Sept. 24 through 28 at the Miami Convention Center, is "on pause" but stressed that local and federal officials are confident their flooding infrastructure is prepared.
